God is mentioned in the holy scriptures,

but also in the arts,

music, cultural policies and Islam in West Java, Indonesia

by Wim van Zanten (Leiden, Netherlands)

1. In introduction

In this essay I would like to look at the discourse on music and Islam in Indonesia, and discuss the musical practice of groups in West Java. In particular I shall describe the cultural policies of the government of West Java, and the role of the Islamic groups and music groups in West Java in launching their policies.

Although Indonesia is a Muslim country with the largest number of Muslims (about 200 million), it is not an Islamic state. This has been laid down in the five principles of the Indonesian state. The first principle is Pancasila, which means that there is no state religion.

It is interesting to note that the second principle is that Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism and Christianity are all equally valid religions.

For more than one reason, we see in present-day Indonesia a process of re-adapting the five principles to the situation in Indonesia, and the increasing impementation of the fields in which Islam can play a role, and the fields in which Islam does not play a predominant role. The problem is not new [...].

(van Dijk 1996: 3).

Since then little has changed.

However, in 1998, after the fall of Suharto, the Soeharto government fell in 1999, and this started a process of reformation (reformasi) of the state, including a democratization of politics, and a process of decentralization of the state, giving more autonomy to the different regions (provinsi daerah) and more freedom of expression in the media.

Although the central government has lost some power, it still retains some power, especially for the central government, this meant that in certain regions Islamic law was introduced, and that the central government had to accept this. This was done by the president as president issued some decrees in progressive Muslim circles. Religious intolerance has however been expressed by some religious leaders, such as the Mufti of Aceh (Mufti of [Nahdlatul Ulama], Ma'muniyah and other Islamic groups cognizant of this development will take action to overcome it". (Rizal Ramadhan 2000).
